SAFE
SHOPPING GUIDE

A Message from Attorney General Lisa Madigan

Every year, my office issues the Safe Shopping Guide as a resource to help families avoid dangerous toys and children's products during the holiday gift-giving season.

Launched in 2007 in response to widespread recalls of children's products, the Safe Shopping Guide was intended to help parents grapple with the estimated 44 million individual units of children's products recalled that year. Every year since, we have issued this easy-to-use guide that includes photographs and descriptions of the products recalled by the Consumer Product Safety Commission, so you can take it with you during your holiday shopping rounds or carefully review your inventory of toys and other children's products already in your home.

This year, however, we're adding a new feature to the guide that addresses another dangerous element of holiday shopping: identity theft. While the number of children's product recalls has decreased significantly in recent years, data breaches have taken their place in the headlines. If 2007 was the "Year of the Recall" as the media termed it then, 2014 should be known as the "Year of the Data Breach," when some of the country's best-known retailers like Target and Home Depot suffered massive breaches that left our financial information compromised and put us at greater risk of identity theft.

In the last year alone, the number of complaints my office received on data breaches has jumped almost 1,600 percent. Data breaches have become so common that many of us have grown accustomed to hearing about them, and as I often say, it's not necessarily a matter of if your personal information will be compromised but when.

So not only do parents need to be wary of the kinds of toys and items they're buying for their children during the holiday season, they need to be careful about how they're paying for them. With a few simple steps, you can minimize the chances your financial information will be compromised and the potential damage that could result. We break down four simple steps you can take in the special feature in this year's guide.

I urge you to take a few minutes as the holiday shopping season kicks off to read through this guide. Not only will it help you keep your children safe, it will ensure you are doing everything you can to protect your family's financial security as well.

Have a happy—and safe—holiday season!

Safe Shopping:

4 Simple Steps to Protecting Your Financial Information

The threat of identity theft has never been greater. In the last year alone, complaints to Attorney General Madigan's Consumer Fraud Bureau about data breaches, which are a leading cause of identity theft, jumped nearly 1,600 percent in the wake of massive breaches at major retailers such as Target and Home Depot. In addition to keeping your family safe from dangerous products during the holiday shopping season, it is also important to be vigilant about protecting your financial information when you are purchasing safe holiday gifts. Here are four simple steps you can take to protect your data:

- 1. Set up transaction alerts on your accounts to receive notifications when your credit or debit card is used above a certain dollar amount, so if someone uses your card without authorization, you'll receive a text message or email and you can immediately call your card issuer to dispute the charge.
- 2. Regularly review your bank and credit card statements to make sure there are no unauthorized transactions. Contest any unauthorized charges immediately by contacting your bank using the toll-free number on the back of your credit or debit card. Prompt reporting of unauthorized charges is critical to limit your liability, particularly if you are a debit card user, because your liability depends on how quickly you report a lost or stolen card. For instance, if you report a lost or stolen debit card before any unauthorized transactions occur, you are not responsible for any of the unauthorized charges, but if you make the report within two business days of losing your card, you can be liable for up to $50 of unauthorized charges. After two days, reporting lost or stolen cards can increase your liability to $500 and up.
- 3. Review your credit reports for unauthorized accounts. You are entitled to one free credit report from each of the three nationwide credit reporting agencies per year. Go to www.annualcreditreport.com or call 1-877-322-8228 to order your credit reports. Make sure all the information is correct. If not, immediately contact the credit reporting agency to request that the information be explained or corrected.
- 4. Consider putting a security freeze on your credit. A security freeze, also known as a credit freeze, essentially locks down your personal data at the consumer reporting agency until you give permission for the release of the data, which can prevent someone from taking out credit in your name. You can easily have the freeze lifted when you want to allow a company to check your credit if, for instance, you are opening new accounts or purchasing a car or home.
